Orland Woman's Club Activities

Mrs. Edgar Graves, Pub. Chairman

Orland Park Women's Club

At the board meeting preceding the regular meeting of the Orland Park Women's Club, the following department chairmen heads of standing committees were chosen:

American Home, Mrs. Harold Kinney; Conservation, Mrs. John Humphrey; Gardens, Mrs. Frank Moore; Publicity, Mrs. Edgar Graves; Public Welfare, Mrs. Ella Loebe; Program Chairman, Mrs. George Gee, Jr.; Dean, Mrs. John Schmaderke; Park Ridge School for Girls, Mrs. George Gee, Sr.; and Reception, Mrs. Thomas Cooper.

Mr. Robert Bogue, an instructor at Hull House spoke on the history, workings and achievements of this world famous organization. It was especially interesting at this time to learn that the work at Hull House, following the death of its leader, Jane Addams, would be carried on by the well-known Grace Abbott.

Mr. Bogue told how the idea of a settlement house originated with Miss Addams at the time she was visiting the tenement districts of London; how, upon seeing the deplorable conditions of the poor, she decided to find a similar place in America, and in 1889 with Ellen Gates Starr, chose the site where Hull House now stands to begin the work.

There are thirteen buildings around Hull House among which are the boy's club building where 2000 boys a week are taught various crafts.

There is the pottery shop with its own kiln where, both hand and machine made pottery are turned out; the handicraft building, where weaving, quilting and other manual work is done and the theatre founded on the "Little Theatre" organized in 1915, and attempting such plays as, "Tale of Two Cities", and Chinese

Tinley Girl Pretty June Bride

June is the month of roses and also of weddings and this June is no exception to that thought in Tinley Park, for on last Sunday afternoon, the German Methodist church, west of town, was the scene of a very pretty wedding.

Miss Sylvia Esther Andres, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Andres of Tinley Park was the bride and the groom was Mr. Arthur Edward Ketterer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ketterer of Blue Island.

At three o'clock, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Mrs. Elizabeth Weisner of Blue Island, the bridal party took their place before the altar where the pastor, Rev. Charles H. Hedler, spoke the words making them man and wife.

The bride was very beautiful in a heavy white satin gown and a long tulle veil, both trimmed with seed pearls and carrying an arm bouquet of bride's roses and lilies-of-the-valley.

Her maid of honor was Miss Dorothy Andres, her sister, who was very lovely in a peach colored georgette gown and carrying an arm bouquet of Talisman roses and salmon colored sweet peas.

The bride's maids were: Miss Lillian Mencke of Tinley Park, gowned in pastel green georgette; and Miss Eleanor Koehler, of Blue Island, cousin of the groom, gowned in pastel blue georgette. Both carried arm bouquets of yellow roses and baby's breath.

The flower girl was, little Janet Harwood of Blue Island and the ring bearer was little Samuel Brunner of Tinley Park.

Preceding the ceremony in the church, Mrs. Edith Deifenbach of Blue Island sang, "I Love You Truly," "O Promise Me," and "At Dawning."

After the ceremony, the wedding party and guests motored to the Elk's Club rooms in Blue Island, where an elaborate dinner was served to 100 guests. At this time the Rev. Mr. Hedler addressed the party with brief but appropriate remarks.

In the evening some 200 more friends joined the party and dancing was enjoyed to the wee small hours of the morning.

The Hungry Five of Blue Island went to the hall and serenaded the newly weds. Also the German Lieder Kranz of Blue Island led by Mr. Corneman, sang several songs dedicated to them.

Lunch was served at midnight and all had a wonderful time.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ketterer bride and groom left Monday morning for Hayward, Wisconsin, where the groom's parents have a summer cottage in the north woods. They will stay there two weeks after which they will return to Blue Island where they will make their home.

The many friends and relatives of this popular couple wish them joy, contentment, health and prosperity together for years.

Fish Frys Go Good at Mokena

The weekly fish frys at Morry's Tavern in Mokena every Friday evening are proving popular and are attracting good crowds.

Drama in which the cast learned to play on Chinese musical instruments and acquired a Chinese vocabulary.

An incident showing the personal participation of Miss Addams in the life of the community was related, whenever she heard of a gang being formed in the neighborhood, she would bring the entire group to Hull House, and interesting them in worthwhile pursuits, would check criminal tendencies in their beginnings.

Some interesting facts are: Six thousand people come and go at Hull House in one week; all committees are composed of women, and most people working there, work without a salary.

It was an instructive talk and the discussion which followed, brought out many incident in the life work of its founder.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Myrick, Mrs. Elmer Newton and Mrs. Quigley.

Orland Legion Post Sponsoring Big 4th Celebration

The Orland Park Post of the American Legion held its regular monthly meeting at the Legion hall on Tuesday, June 10th. Plans were discussed for the annual Legion picnic which will be held Sunday, Aug. 4th.

These affairs have come to occupy a big place in the summer social calendar of our community and in past years have all been wonderful successes.

This year, an even more elaborate celebration is planned. A monster parade with drum and bugle corps, bands, drill teams, decorated floats, and comic features is planned that will surpass anything hitherto attempted. There will be dancing, races, games, and stunts that will provide a good time for all. All these plans are in the hands of competent committees who will get busy and work out the details, which will be announced from time to time thru these columns.

All that is necessary at this time is for you to make a definite reservation of the date, August 4th, to attend the 1935 Legion picnic.

Tinley Garden Club

Entertained At A

Southern Breakfast

Mrs. Florence Anderson, Mrs. Alice Anderson and their mother, Mrs. Bjork, entertained the Tinley Garden Club at the home of the former Thursday. The day was ideal for such an affair as planned by the hostesses. A southern breakfast was served at 11 o'clock on long tables under the tall majestic trees surrounding the Anderson home. White cloths covered the tables which had as center pieces bouquets of field daisies and double butter cups. At each place was a rag doll, representing the old time southern mammy. Each doll had on a red calico dress with a white cap and was the handiwork of the hostess. The American flag floated above the tables. Preceding the serving, Miss Shirley Anderson, daughter of Mrs. Florence Anderson, sang in a sweet girlish manner "It's An Old Southern Custom".

The breakfast menu consisted of strawberries and cream, fried mush and syrup, hot rolls and coffee and ginger bread.

In honor of the birthday of one of the Club's members, Mrs. Emilie Rauhoff, the ginger bread was cut into squares with a small candle in each center. It was lighted and all sang the birthday greeting song accompanied by Mr. Fred Erickson at the piano. At the conclusion of the serving all joined in singing a number of southern songs.

The regular meeting of the Garden Club was held a short time following the luncheon with the president, Mrs. John Klepper in charge. Reports were given and the roll call showed 26 members present. Mrs. Wm. Semmler of Mokena was a guest.

Most of the business concerned the flower show which the club will hold next Thursday afternoon and evening.

To Re-Examine Relief Applicants

Miss Burrill of the Will County Emergency Relief office will be in Mokena Monday morning June 17th at 9 a. m. at the Mokena village hall to re-examine all those who have been on relief.

It is the plan of the Emergency Relief to drop from the relief rolls all persons who can secure employment, but as long as funds are available all needy persons and families who cannot secure employment will be taken care of.

All applications made for relief will have to be attested to by a notary public.

Frankfort Streets Being Improved

Frankfort is improving its streets. They are being scarified and rolled and it is understood the plan is to oil these streets afterward.

Most of the villages have had a lot of difficulty in keeping tractors with lugs on the wheels from driving over freshly oiled streets. These lugs pick up the oil in gobs and leave a bare spot in the road over which they are run. It may be interesting to know that there is a state law establishing a fine of $25 against anyone running a tractor with lugs on the wheels over a freshly oiled road or street. It will be cheaper for a tractor operator to remove the lugs than pay a fine.

Simplicity Keenote of Modern Styling

PATTERN 9318

Simplicity is always a keynote to chic. But for those who are not slender it must often be a complicated simplicity—enjoying the relief of a line here, or a tuck there. The new dress sketched is a masterpiece in design—a fashion that is new and arresting—a model whose excellent taste lends an air of refinement at all times. The deep V yoke with the tiny buttons, and the skirt panel give length and a slenderizing line. It is exceptionally attractive made in a print of fluid, and not too large, design. Raglan sleeves and yoke may contrast, as in the detail sketch.

Patterns 9318 may be ordered only in sizes 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 3 1/2 yards 39 inch fabric.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER AND SIZE.

Address your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West 18th Street, New York, N. Y.

GOLDEN DAWN

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin splits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outwishes Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment, from which, by McNamara's orders, she is removed to the chief's home. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that Nance's real name is Penelope Gatlin. He also discovers that she is heiress to $750,000. Fearful of McNamara, in his official capacity, Nance flees. Lanny finds her in her apartment, asleep. Knowing detectives are on her trail, she disappears, and McNamara learns that she has sailed for France.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

"Santa Claus has been good to you two, hasn't he? Well, are you both willing to go back to your regular jobs now?"

Flynn threw the money on the chief's desk. "We swore an oath—" he began, but McNamara cut him short.

"So have I!" he reminded Flynn fiercely.

"We know every move you've made in this case," Flynn shouted.

"And I knew every move you were going to make before you made it."

Angellotti tucked his present in his pocket. "Come on, Flynn," he urged.

"I can't be called off for money," Flynn persisted stubbornly.

Dan McNamara swept the money on his desk into the drawer. "The widows and orphans of the Policemen's Benevolent and Protective association will be glad to get this. On your way—you and your oath."

Flynn sighed deeply and went out. Fifteen minutes later he came back and said humbly: "Chief, I've changed my mind."

Alas! McNamara was Irish, too. He glanced at the clock. "You're fifteen minutes late, so I'll fine you two hundred and fifty dollars for tardiness and impudence and disloyalty and house-breaking."

"I'll get you for this, McNamara!"

"I don't think so. My advice to you, Pat Flynn, would be to quit monkeying with TNT. I've known detective-sergeants to be taken for a ride."

"Threatening me, eh?"

"Not at all. I wouldn't harm a hair of your red head—and by the way, red hair in the Irish is a sign that they breed back to the Danes and Swedes. A pure-bred Irishman would know enough to lay off a girl with powerful and implacable friends. All you were after was a hundred and twenty-five dollars—half the state reward for recapturing that girl—and when she sends you double that you're not sport enough to meet her half-way."

"I took an oath," Flynn mumbled.

"You should have taken a physic."

"Well, I did take an emetic. Chief I'll never forgive you those tear and stink bombs."

"Well, you shadowed my house and entered it unlawfully."

"Well, I found a lipstick—"

"Belonged to the nurse I had looking after a sick friend of mine," the chief lied glibly.

But Flynn only grinned ferociously.

"I found stained bandages, too."

"Well, the pot can't get nowhere by calling the kettle black," McNamara decided. "Clear out!"

"Give me the money and I'll lay off."

But Dan McNamara shook his head.

"I know your kind, Pat. There's no sense wasting good money on you because you won't stay bought. Clear out, I tell you."

So Flynn cleared out, carrying with him infinitely more respect for his chief than he had heretofore entertained. Well, some day he'd collect heavy interest on that two hundred and fifty dollars.

The last patient had left Stephen Burt's office for the day and the ever watchful Lanny had locked the office door.

"Tired, Stevie?" she queried anxiously, as he loaded his pipe.

"No, of course not," he replied abruptly. "What have I done to be tired?"

"Well, you had another session with that terrible Mrs. Merton."

"She doesn't weary me any more. She merely excites my sympathy. Still sleepless, of course, and still bothered about her poor devil of a husband. She's had detectives on his trail for a month. They've cost her ten dollars a day each and they haven't discovered anything to Merton's discredit."

"It's about time for Mrs. Merton to commence hearing voices of sorts," Lanny commented dryly. "Highball, Stevie?"

"Yes, thank you, Lanny," he said, and deluged Lanny with his sunny smile. "Yes, Mrs. Merton is hearing voices. Her first husband who is dead keeps whispering through space to her. He's trying to tell her how sorry he is. I understand he made a dirty will."

"He would—if he had any common sense. What a poor, beaten devil Merton is! He hasn't the courage of a mouse."

"What can he do, Lanny? His wife is unbalanced, but if he swears out a warrant charging her with insanity, she'll snap out of her lunacy. Mrs. Merton isn't sufficiently insane to be incarcerated. And she's a beautiful woman, well-to-do, respectable. Merton couldn't get to first base on an insanity warrant."

"Then why doesn't he divorce her on grounds of mental cruelty?"

"The man's chivalrous and profoundly sympathetic. Besides, he hasn't any witnesses to prove a charge of mental cruelty. And he can't run away from her, because he has a thriving business here; that she was a nuisance—and to try some other doctor. She went out in a rage."

Lanny jumped up. "Now who do you suppose that is knocking? Your office hours are plainly printed on the door."

"Oh, Lanny, don't be so hard-boiled. Let the patient in."

"Who's there?" Lanny shouted angrily.

"Oh! So it's you, is it? I knew you were there," the voice of Dan McNamara boomed.

Lanny unlocked the door. "Lucky for you you're not a nut, Dan. Stevie and I are just pinning one on."

"I'll join you, if that's the case."

McNamara proffered his huge hand, that resembled nothing so much in life as a bunch of bananas. "Howdy, Medico."

He planted himself in the visitors' chair.

"You have news of Nance Belden," Stephen challenged.

"Gobs of it, Doctor."

Lanny entered with a highball. "I had a letter from Nance yesterday, Dan. She's in Paris. Can you beat that?"

"I can," McNamara replied coolly.

"She's got an apartment at twenty-seven Rue St. Honore, with a cook and a maid, and a chauffeur who drives her around in a Citroen car. And she's having her picture painted."

"She's written you, too, then?"

"Divil a line. I have my information from the prefect of police of Paris."

"Dan, you're marvelous!"

"What's more, Lanny, she's living with her normal personality."

"How do you know?"

"She registered as required by law, under her real name of Penelope Gatlin. I've known her name since the day after her escape from San Quentin."

McNamara proceeded to relate the tale he had previously related to Stephen, who had neglected to retail it to Lanny. "Well, if this isn't a h—l of a tale, Dan!" she said.

"Does it beat your news, Lanny?"

"Beats it by a mile, although while she was at my house she told me as much about herself as she could remember."

"This morning," McNamara continued, "the president of the Security Trust company telephoned me that the girl's mother had called him up to ask if Penelope had been cashing any checks lately. The banker gathered that the mother had a notion her daughter's dead. She doesn't like the idea of having to wait seven years to have the girl declared officially dead before she can lay claim to Penelope's estate."

"Did you find out the name of her mother?" Stephen asked.

"Oh, yes. She's married again, you understand. Naturally she didn't get any information out of the banker. He's on to her, and it was none of her business whether Penelope has been cashing checks or not."

"Get the girl's case record, Lanny," Stephen commanded. "What is her mother's name, Chief?"

"Mrs. Rudolph Merton."

"She's a patient of Stevie's!" Lanny yelled. "She's such a nut the squirrels chase her."

Stephen finished writing and laid down his pen. "I told you, Lanny, that Mrs. Merton wasn't insane enough to be confined."

"Guess I've got Lanny's news beaten, after all, Stephen. This Mrs. Rudolph Merton is the girl's foster-mother."

"Hooray! Hooray! Hooray!" cried Lanny. "How do you know? Did the banker tell you?"

"No. I dug the information up myself."

"Why? How?"

"Why? I wanted to investigate the girl's fortune. So yesterday I had a copy of the will and a copy of the appraisal of the estate made at the courthouse in San Jose and sent up to me. Gatlin stated in the will that he left all of his estate to his beloved adopted daughter, Penelope Gatlin. At the time of his death his estate was worth practically half a million dollars and has since doubled in value. Nance Belden is a lost heiress."

"Not wholly lost," Stephen reminded him. "There are times when she remembers who she is and that she has money."

"She doesn't know anything about her mother," Lanny declared. "I asked her, but she could tell me nothing. And she was Penelope Gatlin when I asked her."

"There is a reason for that," Doctor Burt's scientific mind was already racing along this new trail. "Penelope has had a wretched childhood; she knew nothing but unhappiness up to the time she received the shock that threw her mental gears out of mesh. She hated her mother with a terrible hatred. Feared her, probably. Then she made up her mind to forget her mother. And the will to forget was so strong that she succeeded."

"Not only did she forget her mother but her entire past life as well. Well, she ran away, and she'll never find her way back until she acquires sufficient courage to face the old issues again, surmount them and defeat them."

"But is that possible?" McNamara asked.

"Quite. She will have to have assistance and the sort of treatment I think I can give her, and she must have assurance that never again will she be subjected to the old unhappiness. By the way, I wonder if Penelope was a love child. Have you looked up her parentage, Dan?"

"I haven't. Can't you ask Mrs. Merton about the girl?"

"I suppose I could. But if lunacy ran in the family of her father or mother, I'm not going to bother with Penelope."

"If you decide to take her on, we'll have to get her back into this city," McNamara mourned, "and Flynn will pick her up."

"We'll fix her nose first," Lanny said. McNamara beamed upon her. "Her criminal photographs and Bertillon measurements are gone to glory, Lanny. What did Penelope say in her letter?"

"Not a great deal. She said, among other things, that after leaving my house she found two hundred dollars. So she returned it."

"Give me that two hundred, Lanny. Stephen, our little thief is honest."

"As one personality she would remember you gave her two hundred dollars, but as the other she couldn't remember who gave it to her," said Lanny.

"Get over to Paris as quick as you can," McNamara commanded, "or she'll be stealing the Eiffel tower."

"Stephen can't spare me," said Lanny.

"Stephen can spare you," he decided. "It's got to be," McNamara urged.

"Nance fled the town with a letter of credit for ten thousand, but she'll go through that like a weasel through a rat hole. Take a bankroll with you, Lanny, and when you get there take charge of her funds."

"And have her nose done over while you're there," Stephen urged.

"There's a hitch," said Lanny. "The girl evidently got a passport in New York—"

"Not in New York. In San Francisco," McNamara interrupted.

"Well, will a strange photograph on her passport get her back into the United States?"

"She can go to the American consul in Paris, and present proof that she's the same woman with a different nose," Stephen said.

"She'll do nothing of the sort," McNamara was very emphatic. "When her trail is lost it will be lost forever. Lanny, when you have that new nose built for the girl, have half a dozen new passport photographs of her taken, and send them and her passport to me. The seal of the United States of America is on the passport and covers a part of the photograph. I know a man that'll make me a seal that would fool the American eagle himself. We'll fit it down over the old seal and stamp the new photograph. Then I'll send it back to you—and may God have mercy on my soul, for you can blackmail me for that the longest day I live," Dan cried.

Naming the U. S. A.

The name United States of America is really an evolutionary product, a name which began to develop as soon as the colonies banded themselves together, notes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Some of the old local coins refer to the "Unity States of America." The Declaration of Independence asserts "that these united colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent states." It also speaks of them as the United States of America. So do the Articles of Confederation and Constitution. The "authority" by which the name is used is that of the people, as delegated to the Continental congress and the other bodies which shaped the form of our government.

Scientists Claim Brain and Brawn Go Together

The theory that brains and brawn go together was put forth recently by a group of scientists who had assembled to discuss the world's ills and how to cure them. A large chest expansion is a symbol of mental breadth, it was said, while a narrow chest denotes compressed intelligence. Children who are the best students, surveys have shown, are those with the biggest chests. Statistics were called in to show that more successful persons, as a rule, have more generous height and girth measurements than their less fortunate neighbors. Thus the idea of brain power being associated with brawn has been elevated somewhat from the field of physical culture arguments.

Among the statistics cited in support of the theory that larger dimensions are indicative of business success were those showing sales managers, on the average, to be twenty-five pounds heavier and one inch taller than salesmen. Railroad presidents appear to be thirty-one pounds heavier and one and one-half inches taller than station agents. The relative avoidrups of generals and private soldiers was not given.

Regardless of the scientific explanations of these phenomena, the ordinary man—possibly the station agent—has some sensible views on the subject. In the first place, he readily will grant, good health is the best stimulant for a smoothly working brain. There are exceptions, of course, as in the case of the genius who has cultivated his brain cells to compensate for physical deficiencies, but in the main the better a person

DAISY FLY KILLER

PROTECT YOUR LIFE AND THE LIVES OF OTHERS!

There are three questions you should ask yourself about the tires you buy:

- 1—"Will the non-skid tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"
- 2—"Are they built to give me the greatest blowout protection?"
- 3—"Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

Answer No. 1—Harvey S. Firestone early realized the value of tire traction and safety and was the first to design an All Rubber Non-Skid Tire. Through the years Firestone has led the way in the design and development of tires with most effective non-skid treads.

Firestone does not depend solely on traction and non-skid tests made by its own engineers — it employs a leading University to make impartial tests for non-skid efficiency of its tires, and their most recent report shows that Firestone High Speed Tires stop the car 15% quicker than the best of all popular makes of tires.

Answer No. 2—Blowout protection must be built into a tire. Friction and heat within the tire is the greatest cause of blowouts. Firestone protects its tires from friction and heat by a patented process which soaks every cord and insulates every strand with pure liquid rubber. This is an additional process known as Gum-Dipping, by which every 100 pounds of cotton cords absorb eight pounds of rubber. This extra process costs more and is not used in any other make of tire.

Leading race drivers investigate the inbuilt qualities of the tires they use, because their very lives depend upon their tires, and they always select Firestone Tires for their daring speed runs. In fact, Firestone Tires have been on the winning cars in the gruelling Indianapolis 500-mile race for fifteen consecutive years, and they were on the 5000-pound car that Ab Jenkins drove 3,000 miles in 23½ hours on the hot salt beds at Lake Bonneville, Utah, at an average speed of 127.2 miles per hour, without tire trouble of any kind. These amazing performance records are proof of the greatest blowout protection ever known.

Answer No. 3—Thousands of car owners reporting mileage records of 40,000 to 75,000 miles, is proof of the long mileage and greater economy by equipping with Firestone High Speed Tires. Let these unequalled performance records be your buying guide.

Go to the Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Tire Dealer and let him equip your car with Firestone Tires, the safest and most economical tires built.

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative Seventh District

Springfield, Ill.—On a day, late in the winter of 1861, a sober-minded, lanky individual busied himself with "cording" his baggage in the old Chenery House in this city. Writing the shipping address on cards, he carefully tacked them on the trunks about which he had knotted the retaining ropes. The cards bore this address: "A. LINCOLN, WASHINGTON, D. C."

This individual was Abraham Lincoln—President-elect of the United States. Menial though the chore might appear, it marked the devotedness to detail and the painstaking care through which he had risen from the log cabin home of the pioneer to a position of highest honor in a great nation.

The following day, February 11, he spoke intimately to a group of friends who had assembled to bid him farewell, in this laconic manner:

"Friends, no one who has never been placed in a like position can understand my feelings at this hour nor the oppressive sadness I feel at this parting. For more than a quarter of a century, I have lived among you, and during all that time I have received nothing but kindness at your hands. Here I have lived from my youth until now I am an old man. Here the most sacred ties of earth were assumed; here all my children were born, and here one of them is buried. To you, dear friends, I owe all that I have, all that I am. All the strange, checkered past seems to crowd now upon my mind. Today I leave you; I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon General Washington.

"Unless the great God, who assisted him, shall be with and aid me, I must fail. But if the omniscient mind and the same almighty arm that directed and protected him shall guide and support me, I shall not fail—I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To him I commend you all. Permit me to ask, that with equal sincerity and faith, you all will invoke his wisdom and guidance for me. With these few words I must leave you—for how long I know not. Friends, one and all, I must now bid you an affectionate farewell."

With these words, Abraham Lincoln left his home in Springfield—never to return. For twenty-four years he had played the part of an ordinary citizen in the social life of the town, during the years when he was attaining distinction at the bar and leadership in politics.

For twenty years he had stumped the state. The great campaign of 1840 found him in the field for William Henry Harrison. Four years later he was out for Henry Clay. In 1846 he toured the central counties in his own campaign for Congress. Ten years later he spoke more than a hundred times for John C. Fremont, while in 1858 he and Douglas ranged from Freeport to Jonesboro, and from Quincy to Charleston, in the most famous of all political campaigns. In the end there was scarcely a village in Illinois in which he was unknown.

Thus, for Abraham Lincoln, Illinois meant more than an accidental place of residence; it was a real influence in the course of his life and a contributing factor to his great accomplishment. It was only fitting, therefore, that after his death his body should be brought back to Springfield, to rest forever on the tree-shaped slopes of Oak Ridge Cemetery.

The following public proclamation appeared in the Springfield papers under date of May 26th:

"WHEREAS, Springfield is to be honored with the holding of the Mid West Republican Conference on June 9, 10 and 11; and

"WHEREAS, the reason for holding this conference in Springfield is because of the association of Springfield with Abraham Lincoln; and

"WHEREAS, a request has been made of the people of Springfield, by the housing committee of this conference, asking for the listing of rooms for the accommodation of 20,000 visitors attending said Mid West Republican Conference; and

"WHEREAS, Springfield has acquired a reputation through visitation at the Lincoln shrines by people from all over the world as 'The Friendly City'; the people of Springfield are gracious and hospitable;

"NOW, THEREFORE, I do call on the good citizens of Springfield to throw wide their doors in order to house these visitors, who are about to enter our fair city."

Signed: John W. Kapp, Jr., Mayor.

Republicans by the thousands from the state of the Central West thronged to Springfield, Illinois, last week to attend the grass roots convention that was held in the shadows of the tomb of Abraham Lincoln. Perhaps this will bring to the mind of many Democrats their forgotten man—Thomas Jefferson.

Explaining to Canada
Mr. Morgenthau's Work
A West Point for Crime
Alfred du Pont

Arthur Brisbane

Some day, let us hope, the two countries will be one, by mutual agreement, or Canada might annex the United States in a friendly way, if that were more acceptable, a majority of voters ruling.

The North American continent, from the Mexican border to the North pole, should be one nation, or if Mexico and others would come in, all the way down to the Panama canal, so much the better.

There will be no war between this country and any part of the British empire. Common sense forbids it. Any air base of ours would probably be as useful to Canada as to ourselves, and we should be delighted to see Canada establish a string of air bases to the north of us, especially along her Pacific and Atlantic coasts.

Secretary Morgenthau, never in business as a banker, interested, personally, in farming more than in money, has shown the outside world, to its surprise, that he can make the American dollar keep its place in the procession, regardless of many billions of bond issues, no gold basis, and other novelties.

Gamblers that ordinarily enjoy speculation in "exchange" are afraid of the American dollar. And curiously, while some Americans are sending money to other countries, to make it "safe," foreigners, and especially Britishers, are investing more and more heavily in the United States.

Washington discusses a "West Point for war on crime," a semi-military school under the attorney general to train fighters to meet the national crime army, that collects almost as much money as the national government itself takes in.

The war would be simple if government would treat crime as it would an outbreak of yellow fever, or Asiatic cholera, taking it really seriously.

Habitual criminals are known, men of ten or fifteen convictions, racketeers, gunmen. Make it clear that once locked up they would never get out as long as they lived and you would see the crime fade away.

Very bad news for this country, in which efficiency and energy count as public asset number one, is the sudden death of Alfred du Pont, stricken with heart disease in his residence near Jacksonville, Fla. At seventy years of age Mr. du Pont was planning, as he should be, all sorts of new enterprises that would have been interesting to him. He needed no more money, wanted to be useful.

Great Britain is excited about the Germans building submarines, especially annoyed to learn that the submarines are of a "super" type, carrying guns as well as torpedo tubes, able to hunt British or other ships anywhere on earth, some alleged to carry a small airplane, easily launched. Britain has plane-carrying submarines, but that is different. German submarines now finished are about to start maneuver practice off Wilhelms-hafen.

Nations rise to great heights, glorious power, then crumble, disappear; desert sands cover their streets and temples. Patient archeology digs them out and wonders. Read Volney's "Ruins of Empires" to find that process well described.

What causes it? Do nations grow old and die "naturally," inevitably, as individuals do? Sometimes plagues wipe them out; the black death nearly destroyed Europe. Malaria tore down the power of Rome and recently killed some 50,000, following a sudden mosquito attack in the Far East.

You are not surprised to learn, in spite of pacifist protests and protests from certain Japanese who are not pacifists, the President thinks it wise to explore around and see just what this country needs in the way of "defense methods" on the Pacific.

A crime, unbelievable, has been reported from Texas. Howard Pierson, aged twenty, killed his mother and father, then shot himself in the arm, pretending that bandits had done it.

After police had kept him awake for awhile he confessed, said he did it "for revenge."

He did it actually, authorities declared, for $17,000 insurance on his father's life. He killed the mother because she would have got the insurance.

A LOVELY GARDEN

I know a lovely garden
And its not so far away
Where beauty and enchantment
Preside from day to day.

Where lilacs grace the pathway
In white and violet hues, and Apple blossoms, rare perfume
Rival the garden's own bloom.

As you traverse winding pathways
A riot of yellow and blue
Orange and pink, and of purple,
Tall tulips just nodding to you.

A pool in the background is hidden Amid greenery, honeysuckle, and yew
And Pan lurks teasingly lovely
Piping a merry tune.

The Magnolia tree near the hedgerow
A flutter of pink and of white
Stands out in nature's grandeur,
A gorgeous, wondrous fair sight.

There's an orchard back of the garden
Where dove's build nests in the spring.
The wren and the robin, and blackbird,
The Crimson and Blue-jay sing.

The sun's glittering rays on the Redwood,
Washed by the morning's fresh dew.
Added glimmer of golden sunlight
Giving gladness to me and to you.

In this garden of beauty and color
Miracles come to pass.
For the magical touch of the Giver
Unlatched Spring and Summer at last.

Through fairy bowers of foliage
Come we to Marge's home door
Thrown wide; a wholesome welcome
Enchantment awaiting galore.

Through halls to the wide old stairway,
We eagerly went our way
To the landing neat, and the marble seat
We were prone to sit and gaze.

The bed all tufted in satin
Sky-blue, with old ivory too,
Glints of gold in the background
On tables, chairs and stools.

Ivory, marble and staghorn
Adorn this fair lady's abode.
With plate of fold and silver
In the crystal dining room.

Grandfathers' clock near the fireplace
Is chiming the hour is late.
The sun in the west is sinking
While we our departure take.

Clothed in rose petal pink, she our hostess,
Is bidding adieu.
To the happy throng—she invited
To enjoy the day with you.

The wine in the flask still lingers
The bud on the rose will bloom
The Iris, Poppies and Peonies,
All in gorgeous attune.

Soon will be flaunting their petals
With the Phlox and Mignonette too.
We will gather again in the sunlight
With fleecy white clouds overhead.

"We are nearer God's heart in a
Garden
Than any place else on earth."

Rumor about AAA

Is Set Aside by
Wallace Answer

Rumors and whisperings, predicting the wiping out of AAA programs and contracts in Will and other counties are false and can be dismissed as such, judging from an official statement which Secretary Wallace has just issued with the approval of President Roosevelt.

Farm Adviser L. W. Braham has just received a copy of the statement as it was received from Washington by the extension service of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

The statement was issued to set aside rumors and false reports which have been afloat since the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision on the NRA. These rumors have attempted to mislead farmers into believing that the AAA would soon be wiped out, contracts would be cancelled and adjustment payments would be stopped. In some cases farmers were falsely told that they might as well plant as much corn as they wished and otherwise drop their AAA contracts.

Secretary Wallace's statement in refutation of such rumors follows: "In co-operation with leaders of Congress amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act are being perfected which are intended to bring the act's provisions as to marketing agreements and licenses into line with the Schechter case decision and also to safeguard the farmers' voluntary adjustment program on basic commodities. These voluntary adjustment programs were not in the path of the Schechter case decision and in no event could there be any question of the government's ability to fulfill its contracts with farmers. Nevertheless, we have taken advantage of the decision to seek perfection in the law which will make certain the government's authority to continue processing tax rates in accordance with amended provisions of the act."

The Farm Telephone Increases Farm Profits

Whether you run a truck farm, or merely sell the surplus from your garden, a telephone will be a highly profitable aid. Before trips to town, it's easy to call customers and receive orders for definite kinds and quantities of produce for delivery at specified times. Thus spoilage is reduced to a minimum and profits increased. On larger farms the general crops as well as vegetables, fruit and livestock may also be sold by telephone. In addition the telephone is a constant protection for farm and family. And its cost is small.

What Rail Roads

Mean to America
In Financial Way

Railroad week is being observed to June 15th and it is interesting to note what the railroads mean in a financial way to the nation.

The railroads paid in taxes in 1929 a total of $396,682,634 and in 1933 paid $249,602,895. In 1929 6.32c out of every dollar of operating revenue was expended in taxes. In 1933 this figure increased to 8.06c.

In 1932 the Rock Island Lines paid in taxes in the State of Illinois $861,353.66, of which $335,799.79 was for maintenance of schools.

Based on 1930 per capita cost the Rock Island Lines contributed in taxes for schools an amount equivalent to the education of 3040 pupils and to this may be added a total of 39,688 pupils in the other thirteen states which it serves.

In 1932 the Railroads of Illinois maintained one out of every fourteen pupils in its primary and secondary schools.

Are not the Railroads entitled to more public help?

In 1932 the funded debt of all Railroads was $11,835,523,146: The capital stock was $7,057,936,301: The capital stock was only thirty-seven (37) per cent of the net capitalization. These same Railroads, in 1932 represented a net investment in road and equipment of $26,086,991,000, or twenty-eight (28) per cent in excess of the net capitalization.

Just how can the critics justify their claim of "watered stock?"

In 1929 Railroads paid cash dividends of $490,125,673, equivalent to six (6) per cent; but in 1933 these dividends had decreased to $95,533,622 or only 1.2 per cent. This represents a reduction of eighty (80) per cent. How would you like to have some of this stock? Remember that many railroads failed to earn an amount sufficient to meet their fixed charges.

In 1929 railroad employees were paid $2,896,566,531 and in 1933 only $1,403,881,864, a reduction of more than fifty-one (51) per cent. The number of employees for the same years shows a reduction of 689,957 persons. In 1933, out of every dollar of operating revenue, 43.2c was paid for labor.

The Railroads have decreased their employees' casualty (injury) rate from thirty ((30) per one million (1,000,000) man hours ten years ago, to slightly less than seven (7) in 1933, a reduction of about seventy-seven (77) per cent. Railroads are, by far, the safest means of transportation and, incidentally, the most comfortable and dependable.

Railroads are among the largest purchasers of miscellaneous materials in the country. In 1933, out of every dollar of operating revenue, 21.6c was paid for materials, including fuel; yet total railroad material purchases decreased from $1,329,535,000 in 1929 to $465,850,000 in 1933 or about sixty-five (65) per cent, emphasizing how essential the Railroads are to the prosperity of the country.

ILLINOIS
BREVITIES

Howard Reid, Bradford farmer, was killed by lightning when a bolt struck his tractor.

Rev. Frank M. Harry of Champaign, a retired Methodist minister who held a number of pastorates in Illinois until his retirement in 1928, died.

Dr. Clarence Loeb, a leading oculist until ill health forced his retirement from practice seven years ago, died in his home in Winnetka. He was fifty-nine years old.

By a vote of 81-1 the Illinois house passed the Granata bill appropriating $12,000 to James A. Long of Chicago, who served five and one-half months in Joliet penitentiary for a robbery later confessed by another man. Long then was released.

L. L. Brewer, ninety, last survivor of the Grand Army of the Republic in Rock Falls, died. He was a sergeant in company B, Twelfth Infantry, and fought at Shiloh, Altoona Pass, and Corinth. He participated in the siege of Atlanta and marched with Gen. W. T. Sherman to the sea.

Bitter charges of political chicanery against the state Democratic organizations were made as 2,000 citizens met in Maywood to demand that Arthur J. Bidwell, Republican, be restored to his seat in the state senate. Bidwell was unseated by the Democratic senate and his place taken by his Democratic opponent, Charles F. Baumrucker, former mayor of River Forest.

Fresh water pirates who for the last two years have robbed speed boat riders along the lake front at Chicago will run into trouble if they try it again this summer. The coast guard announced that a trim, high speed craft, capable of making 40 miles an hour, would be added to the government fleet in Chicago. Inside the 23 foot hull of the new craft are racks for shotguns, pistols, tear gas guns, and submachine guns.

Through the art department of the work and rehabilitation division of the Illinois emergency relief commission, nine Illinois institutions have received a variety of art works based on the theme, "The American Scene." A. L. Bowen, director, state department of public welfare, announced. Cost of the materials used in producing the murals, paintings and statuary was paid by the welfare institutions, while the commission compensated the Illinois artists who executed the work.

Governor Horner indicated, although he did not say so directly, that the Supreme Court of the United States, in overturning the national recovery act, has also destroyed the state NRA. Attorney General Otto Kerner was more vigorous than the governor in his statement that the state NRA is dead. Illinois, he said, could not continue to enforce its act against firms doing business solely within the state while concerns engaged in interstate commerce were freed of similar restraints. To do so, he said, would be unfair.

The purchase of Chicago public school textbooks on a competitive basis, rather than by the present discount method, would create a saving of approximately $250,000 each year, according to a survey of school book purchases in other states recently completed under the direction of James B. McCahey, president of the board of education. A bill to grant Chicago the right to competitive purchase of textbooks is being sponsored by the board in the legislature.

The Illinois aeronautics commission endorsed the plan of Mayor Kelly and the city council to build an island airport in Lake Michigan, off Sixteenth street, and urged that the city solidly back the mayor in his quest for federal funds for the project in a statement issued by Maurice L. Horner, Jr., executive secretary. "The commission has approved the island airport plan from the beginning, and it is now thoroughly sympathetic to the efforts of the city administration to obtain federal money for the construction of the project," Mr. Horner said. "Chicago should certainly act now to obtain federal funds for the port. Any quibbling as to the exact location of the airport will merely delay allocation of funds by the government."

With returns tabulated from virtually all the major wheat producing counties in Illinois, the AAA wheat acreage reduction policy was shown to have won overwhelming support in the recent poll of farmers. The average majority in favor of prolonging the program was 10 to 1. Some counties reported unanimous support and not one went against it. In 57 counties the vote was: Yes, 12,005; no, 1,273. The poll was on the question whether the producers wanted the present plan, which expires with the 1935 crop, to be continued in the future, AAA officials having under consideration an extension for four years. Both farmers who had signed 1935 contracts to cut acreage and get bounties in return and those who had not were eligible to vote and they were equally affirmative, the tabulation revealed.

Carnot Doty, special policeman at a carnival grounds in Murphysboro, was charged with the murder of Albert Baker, nineteen, shot during a riot between youths from a CCC camp and employees of the carnival. Ten others were injured in the fight, which started when the CCC workers from Camp Glenn complained that gambling devices were run dishonestly.

H. M. Steely, Sr., seventy-eight, dean of the Vermilion county bar, died at his home in Danville. He was a native of the county and had practiced law in Hoopeston and Danville since 1880.

Machine Gunners Fire at a Painted Landscape

MACHINE-GUN practice with all the advantages of open terrain and landscape targets is being accomplished at the Fort Wayne army post, Detroit, Mich., by using painted landscapes in a limited area. The range used is 1,000 inches, which corresponds exactly to the 1,000-yard range of open country. The gun crews fix their sights and ranges the same as they would on a 1,000-yard range, and fire at landscape objects in the upper black and white panel. The lower colored duplicate scenes are to enable gunners to pick out their targets more readily.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

NANNY MEADOW MOUSE IS WORRIED

NANNY MEADOW MOUSE was worried. Yes, sir, Nanny Meadow Mouse was worried. Nanny is a home body. In the first place, most of the time she has a family to think about and care for. There are babies in Nanny's snug little home most of the time. What with helpless babies and headstrong, half-grown children eager to get out in the Great World and show how smart they are, and fully grown children already setting will risk her own life for her babies' sary risks. The most precious thing anybody possesses is life. To risk this for something which at best is nothing more than pleasure is the most foolish thing in the world. Nanny and how necessary it is that a young Meadow Mouse who would live to a good old age be carefully trained.

One of the first things to be learned is the foolishness of taking unnecessary homes of their own. Nanny has real cause for worry. You see, no one knows better than she what a lot of dangers surround a Meadow Mouse any time, but she is far too wise to risk it for any other reason.

"If you lost your life you've lost everything," is a favorite saying of Nanny's, and when you come to think of it, it is exactly so. Sometimes Danny Meadow Mouse laughs at her and tells her that the older she grows the more timid she becomes. That doesn't trouble Nanny at all. She simply babies all the time on his mind as does Nanny. So he has more time to think about himself and the things he wants to do. Then, too, the sharp little wits in that funny little head of his have brought him through so many tight places that he has come to think himself quite as smart as anybody else and quite able to take care of himself no matter what happens, which shows that he isn't as wise as Nanny, though it wouldn't do to tell him so.

The day that Danny took it into his head to visit the Smiling Pool had been a very trying one for Nanny. Danny hadn't told her where he was going or that he expected to be gone long. The half-grown children had

QUESTION BOX
by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a woman forty-three years of age and have never been married. A widower about my own age is madly in love with me and wants to marry me. I love him all right, but he says he is a member of twelve lodges. What I want to know is this: Is it wise to marry a man who belongs to as many as twelve lodges?

Sincerely,
MAY SOONICK.

Answer: There is no harm in it as long as you will be satisfied with him staying away from home twelve nights a week.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

What does it mean when you see a lot of letters after a doctor's name?

Sincerely,
MEDDIE SON.

Answer: That simply means he got to where he is by "degrees."

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Do you think it is really true that women make fools of men?

Yours truly,
IKE ANTBEER LEEVIT.

Answer: Some times they do, but some times it isn't necessary.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I met a fellow the other day and have since found out that he is an awful liar and is not thought very much of in our community. I am placed in a very embarrassing position. He has asked me to lend him $50, and when I asked him when he would pay me back he said: "I will pay you back in two weeks, on the word of a gentleman." What shall I do?

Truly yours,
IONA TRUCK.

Answer: Tell him you'll lend him the money if he'll bring the gentleman around.

They kept her so worried that she didn't have time to think of Danny. But when the Black Shadows began to creep over the Green Meadows and Danny had not returned, it popped into her head that something dreadful must have happened to him. She began to worry. The later it grew the more she worried.

AN OLD COUPLE

By ANNE CAMPBELL

TWO with hair as white as snow
Closely sit together.
In their hearts the banked fires glow.
Bitter is the weather;
But the joy of summer days
Still is mirrored in their gaze.

As two trees that through long years
Toward each other bending,
Nourished both by smiles and tears,
See the sun descending,
So do these two, wondering,
Face the end, and closer cling.

Long the journey from the day
They joined hands, light-hearted.
Hard sometimes, the winding way
Since the journey started,
But it's been a worth-while pull!
Sharing made it beautiful!

Weather Affects Human Efficiency

Studies of the effect of atmospheric conditions on human efficiency show that the majority of us work faster in the spring and autumn than in the winter and that we accomplish more work than usual immediately after a change in weather, not only on a clear day following a stormy period but also during a storm following several days of sunshine.—Collier's Weekly.

Mother's Cook Book

ENTREE OR MADE DISH

THOSE who plan meals are often confronted by the problem of what to serve to add variety, "pep," or to fill a vacant place in the menu. Something is needed that is different, tasty, while at the same time it fits in with the other dishes which compose the meal.

In bridge, when in doubt, lead trumps—in food planning, when in doubt, add a dish which appeals. The following are a few which may be useful; they may be varied by using different fruits or vegetables.

Orange Fritters.

Take one and one-fourth cups of pastry flour, two teaspoons of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoon of salt, mix well and add four tablespoons of evaporated milk and seven tablespoons of water, one beaten egg—beat until smooth, or about two minutes. Take two seedless oranges, remove all fiber and dip each section into the batter. Have deep fat hot enough to fry a cube of bread a golden color in a minute, then drop in the fritters a few at a time; cook for five minutes, drain, sprinkle with sugar and serve.

Lobster Croquettes.

Take two cups of chopped cooked lobster, mix one-fourth of a teaspoon of salt, the same of mustard, a dash of cayenne and add to the lobster. Prepare a white sauce, using two tablespoons of butter, three of flour, one-half teaspoon of salt and a cup of milk. Add the cooked white sauce to the lobster, mold into balls when well chilled and fry in deep fat, using a hotter fat than the above. Forty seconds for the browning of the bread is the right amount. Serve with tatar sauce.

Mushrooms on Toast.

Cook mushrooms in butter for five minutes, add cream and seasoning and pour over well buttered toast. Serve at once.

Tunic Frock

For a hot day at the office this short sleeved tunic frock is very chic. When the tweed-patterned navy and white tunic coat is removed, it shows a one-piece dress of crossbarred white crepe.

Lobster Traps

Lobster traps are usually 3 or 4 feet long and capable of containing a number of lobsters. They are set in water ranging from 5 to 30 fathoms or even more, and are visited every two or three days, if the weather permits. From the traps the lobsters are taken to floating cages, called cars, where they are kept until enough are gathered to warrant a shipment.

Lesson for June 16

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 8:11-18; II Corinthians 9:6-8.

GOLDEN TEXT—It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.—I Corinthians 4:2.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Sharing God's Gifts.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Joyous Use of God's Gifts.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Does Stewardship Mean?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Practicing Stewardship Today.

I. Warning Against Forgetting God (Deut. 8:11-18).

God is forgotten.

1. Through plenty (vv. 12, 13). It is always true that in time of prosperity the people forget God.

2. Through pride (vv. 13, 14). The natural tendency of the human heart when visited with abundance is to be lifted up with pride.

3. Through self-confidence (vv. 15-18). The inevitable result of pride is self-confidence. The children of Israel arrogated to themselves the power to get wealth. It is ever so that material prosperity turns the natural heart away from God as the source of blessing.

II. The Sin of Robbing God (Mal. 3:7-12).

One of the sins of Israel which brought upon them the chastising hand of the Lord was that of withholding the tithe. The prophet assures the people that their bringing into the storehouse their tithes and offerings would be responded to by God in sending them abundance.

III. Talents Are to Be Used for God (Matt. 25:14-30).

1. The distribution of the talents (vv. 14, 15). This distribution was a sovereign act, giving to each one of his own servants his own money.

2. The employment of the talents (vv. 16-18). Two put to use the talents given them, resulting in doubling their value. One hid his talent.

3. The accounting for the talents (vv. 19-30). The Lord later demanded an accounting from each one of the servants. The ones who had been faithful were not only praised but promoted, while the one who hid his talent was not only reproached but also suffered the loss of the talent given him.

IV. Giving Should Be Systematic (I Cor. 16:2).

This instruction concerning giving is based upon the glorious doctrine of the resurrection of Christ. The one who has come under the power of the resurrection of Christ will be both systematic and liberal in his benevolences. The standard for Christian giving is not the tithe, but "as God hath prospered him."

V. Principles of True Benevolence (II Cor. 8:1-15).

1. Examples of true Christian giving.

a. The source of true giving (v. 1) is said to be the grace of God, which means that the disposition to give freely of one's possessions must be created by the Holy Spirit. b. They gave from the depths of their poverty (v. 2), and their unstinted gifts thus became richer in meaning. c. Their willingness surpassed their ability (v. 3). God reckons gifts by the degree of willingness, not by the amount given. d. They were insistent on being allowed the privilege of giving (v. 4). Christians ought to be taught that giving of their means is a high privilege. e. They first gave themselves to the Lord (v. 5). The only method of raising money which has God's sanction is a consecrated hand in its own pocket.

2. Emulation in giving urged (II Cor. 8:6-15). Paul used the generosity of the Macedonian church as a means of stimulating liberality with the Corinthians.

a. Not as a command (v. 8). Giving which has God's sanction must be not only spontaneous, but liberal. b. As a proof of the sincerity of love (v. 8). Love is benevolent action toward the one loved. c. As the completion of their harmony of Christian character (v. 7). The Corinthian church abounded in spiritual gifts, but needed the grace of liberality for the harmonizing of their lives. d. Christ an example of self-sacrifice (v. 9). Christ was rich, but for their sakes he became poor. e. Gifts to be acceptable with God must be from a willing mind (vv. 10-12). f. Every Christian should give something (vv. 13-15).

3. Encouragement to give (II Cor. 9:6, 7).

a. The volume of reaping is based upon the sowing (v. 6). b. There should be a heart purpose (v. 7). c. Giving should not be of necessity (v. 7). d. God loves a cheerful giver (v. 7).

All Are of God

Activities commonly called non-religious—science, art, literature, industry—all come from the same God. Their autonomy must be respected in the sense that there must be no attempt at ecclesiastical control over them.

Life

Life is not made up of great sacrifices, of great duties, but of little things. Smiles and kindness given habitually are what win and preserve the heart.—Sir H. Davy.

Do YOU Know—

That the origin of "April Fool's Day" is unknown, but the custom has long prevailed in many countries. In Scotland the victim of the trick is called a "gowk" and in France "poisson d'Avril" or April Fish.

★ ★ The Battle of Bunker Hill ★ ★

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

JUNE 17 will mark the 160th anniversary of a battle famous in our history. On that date many an American, no doubt, will take pride in recalling how "our Revolutionary forefathers whipped the British redcoats at the Battle of Bunker Hill."

This is a story of that battle and of some of the men whose names are, in one way or another, linked with it. But, as you will discover, it does not agree in all details with the story as you learned it from your school-book histories.

In 1750 or thereabouts a Frenchman migrated from Canada to the Massachusetts Bay colony and settled on a hill overlooking Boston harbor. His name was Monsieur Bon Coeur—not a difficult name to pronounce unless you happened to be a Yankee who spoke with a nasal twang. But most of his neighbors were Yankees and they spoke thus.

The French-Canadian tried hard to teach them the throaty sound of "Bong Koor." But they couldn't seem to get it. Or else they wouldn't, because they wanted to "plague that Canuck." At any rate, their name for him was "Mister Bunker." M. Bon Coeur protested. If they must Anglicize his fine old French name, who not use the translation of it and call him "Mister Goodheart"? But, no! They wouldn't. So Bunker he became, Bunker he remained and the hill on which he lived and reared his family became Bunker's Hill. Thus came about the first paradox in the history of a famous battle.

Two decades after Monsieur Bon Coeur, late of Canada, had resigned himself at last to being Mister Bunker of Boston, that city was in a state of siege. That fact, in itself, was something of a paradox. For the besiegers, although they numbered between 15,000 and 16,000, were little more than an unorganized mass of armed civilians. Military experts of the time would probably have given this Continental army (it was not yet the American army) but little chance in a pitched battle with the besieged, composed of six or seven thousand well-trained and well-equipped British regulars commanded by Gen. Thomas Gage.

During the second week in June, 1775, Colonel Gridley of the Continental forces planned a series of earthworks which would strengthen the position of the besiegers around Boston. But before he could proceed with his plans, his commander-in-chief, Gen. Artemas Ward, ordered him to proceed to Bunker Hill for the construction of redoubts on this eminence of 110 feet overlooking Boston from across the Charles river.

In the meantime Gage had noticed the menacing heights at Dorchester and Charlestown and determined to seize them. Upon learning of this, a force of Colonials under Col. William Prescott forestalled the British commander and on June 16 took up their position on Breed's Hill, 62 feet high and nearer to Charlestown than Bunker Hill. It was a foolhardy thing to do, for Breed's Hill was a dangerously advanced position within easy gun range of Boston. In fact, the occupation of these heights back of Charlestown was a rash maneuver which might easily have proved disastrous. For if Gage had taken advantage of his opportunity to move heavy guns on the British warships at his disposal and sailed them at flood tide around into the Mystic river, he could have swept the narrow neck of land which led to Cambridge with cannon fire to cut off the retreat of the Colonials and, by landing his troops behind Bunker Hill, have caught the whole Patriot force in a trap and destroyed it.

Fortunately for the cause of liberty he was a general who had risen to his position by political wirepulling rather than by proved merit on the field of battle. So he passed up his opportunity for an easy victory and followed a course which was to prove disastrous both to his soldiers and to the prestige of the British arms. He decided upon an immediate frontal attack which General William Howe was selected to lead.

This decision was made on the morning of June 17 when the British discovered the Continentals' fortifications on Breed's Hill well advanced toward completion. A redoubt and breastwork had been erected in front of the hill and from one side of it, extending to the Mystic river, ran a rail fence which they had stuffed with hay to form a flimsy sort of breastwork in front of Bunker Hill. Immediately the British frigate Lively in the Charles river opened fire on these fortifications but failed to stop work on them.

The whole forenoon was taken up in ferrying the British troops across the Charles until about 3,000 had landed. Then they formed in line and about 3 o'clock in the afternoon marched forward to attack the entrenchments held by some 1,500 Colonials.

Prescott succeeded in holding his men in check as the lines of the British advanced steadily toward their breastwork. Even when the front line halted and poured forth a volley (which did little harm because these British regulars with their Brown Bess muskets were far from being good shots), there was no reply from the Continentals crouching behind the hay-stuffed rail fence. But when the marching lines of redcoats reached a point less than 50 yards away, they were met with a blast of fire beyond the power of human courage to endure. The broken lines retreated hastily down the hill.

Under the lashing tongues and the flailing swords of their surviving officers, the British regulars reformed and advanced a second time, only to be thrown back again with frightful losses. But this time reinforcements under Sir Henry Clinton had arrived. By now Howe realized that another frontal attack by his infantry meant only more slaughter. Sending the artillery to make a flank attack, his soldiers advanced again with fixed bayonets. This time they were successful mainly because the Colonials' supply of ammunition had run out and they were able to offer only feeble resistance to the bayonet attack of the British. They retreated across the narrow neck of land, which was swept by fire from the floating batteries of the British in the Charles river but which caused only a few casualties.

The British held possession of the field but they had paid a terrible price for it—a total of 1,054 killed and wounded. The Continentals' losses were a little over 400. It was both a victory and a defeat for them. It was a victory in so far as it proved that untrained militia, fighting behind breastworks and commanded by such men as William Prescott, Israel Putnam and John Stark, could hold their own against British regulars.

It was a defeat in that the Continentals had been driven from their position and had lost heavily—more than 25% of their forces killed or wounded. But even more serious was the fact that this battle created the impression that victory could be won by partly trained militia and that it was not necessary to have a well-disciplined regular army. They could not then foresee the bitter years ahead which would prove otherwise.

So the Battle of Bunker Hill, which was fought on Breed's Hill and which was both a victory and a defeat, became a landmark in American history. It did something more—it gave to America one of her most famous historical paintings and one of her greatest orations.

On the afternoon of June 17, 1775 the rooftops of Boston were crowded with her citizens who followed with painful intensity the ebb and flow of the struggle up and down Breed's Hill. Up on Roxbury heights there was another watcher of that stirring scene—a nineteen-year-old lieutenant in the First Connecticut regiment. His name was John Trumbull.

Young John Trumbull did not long remain in the obscurity of a lieutenant. He made a sketch of the disposition of the British forces around Boston which won him a position as aide-de-camp on the staff of Washington.

In June, 1776, he became deputy adjutant general with the rank of colonel under General Gates at Ticonderoga. There he tried to tell Gates' engineers that Ticonderoga was untenable unless they fortified a certain commanding eminence in the neighborhood. But they refused to listen to the young Connecticut officer and did not fortify the place. As a result the British forced the evacuation of Ticonderoga by occupying that very hill. A short time later, angered because the Continental congress had dated his commission two and a half months later than it should have been, he resigned from the service and returned to Boston to continue the painting which he had determined to make his life-work before the outbreak of the war interrupted him.

But Trumbull could not stay away from the battlefield long. He next became a volunteer aide-de-camp under General Sullivan in Rhode Island and remained until his physical condition made it imperative that he get away from the rigors of army life. In 1780 he went to Paris where he told Benjamin Franklin of his desire to study painting under the great Benjamin West in London. Through Franklin's influence with Lord Germain, British foreign minister, Trumbull was received in West's studio and put to work alongside a young American named Gilbert Stuart, destined for future fame as the painter of portraits of Washington and other Revolutionary notables.

When the news came that Major Andre, the British adjutant-general in America, had been arrested and executed as a spy, the crown authorities were furious. Looking around for a victim to be used in reprisal, they decided that Colonel Trumbull, who had been a "rebel" deputy adjutant general, was the man. He was arrested and confined in Tuthill Bridewell where he calmly went on with his painting even while his fate was undecided. After seven months' imprisonment he gained his freedom through the influence of Benjamin West, who went to the king himself and secured Trumbull's release.

Returning to America, the young painter again entered the army but the surrender of Cornwallis gave him a chance to go back to England. Again he entered the studio of West and received steady encouragement from the master and high praise from the great Sir Joshua Reynolds. At this time Trumbull conceived the idea of commemorating in a series of paintings the principal events of the Revolution.

The first one which he did was based upon his remembrance of the scene he, as a young lieutenant, had viewed from Roxbury heights. One day Sir Joshua Reynolds, visiting West's studio, saw a small painting resting on an easel. Struck by its dramatic qualities and believing that it was the work of West, he started to congratulate his fellow British artist. But West immediately told him that it was the work of the young American, John Trumbull.

Thus Trumbull's painting of "The Battle of Bunker Hill" became the first of those splendid canvases which are such priceless records of the American Revolution and which include his equally if not more famous "Signing of the Declaration of Independence," "Death of Montgomery at Quebec," "Surrender of Burgoyne" and "Surrender of Cornwallis."

Trumbull's Bunker Hill painting figured in a thrilling incident a few years later. He was in Paris during the French Revolution and, sickened by the horrors of the Reign of Terror, he determined to return to America. But when he attempted to leave France he found that he was on the suspect list with the strong possibility that the arch-Terrorist Robespierre would send him to the guillotine.

Trumbull decided to appeal to his painter-friend, Louis David, who was an ally of Robespierre. When David found that the American had his Bunker Hill painting with him, he said "That picture is worth many passports." So Trumbull with the canvas (which was a small one) under his arm accompanied David to the police prefecture. There the French painter, well-known as a "good republican," gained quick admittance. He showed the picture to the chief and explained that the American with him, although a notorious suspect, had been at the Battle of Bunker Hill. "He is as good a Revolutionary as any of us," he declared. As a result Trumbull was allowed to depart from France—his passport, the painting of the Battle of Bunker Hill. (Reproduced above).

Fifty years after the British regulars marched to their deaths up Breed's Hill, a great throng gathered on its slopes to lay the cornerstone of the monument which now stands there. Among the crowd was a small group of Revolutionary war veterans. Also present was a distinguished visitor from across the Atlantic, a Frenchman who had fought for American liberty.

But the eyes of the crowd were not centered so much upon the Marquis de La Fayette as they were upon a young lawyer who had been chosen orator of the day. Turning to the veterans, he began: "Venerable men! You have come down to us from a former generation. Heaven has bounteously lengthened out your lives that you might behold this joyous day. You are now where you stood 50 years ago this very hour, with your brothers and your neighbors, shoulder to shoulder, in the strife for your country."

From then on he held his audience spell-bound with the magic of his voice—in the words which he addressed directly to La Fayette and in his apostrophe to the monument: "We wish, finally, that the last object to the sight of him who leaves his native shore and the first to gladden him who revisits it, may be something which shall remind him of the liberty and glory of his country. Let it rise! Let it rise, till it meets the sun in his coming! Let the earliest light of the morning gild it, and parting day linger and play on its summit."

The speech which the orator delivered there that day has been called "one of the two orations which alone entitle him to a place in that select circle of the immortals." The orator was Daniel Webster.

"ADOPTION" BY INDIANS RACKET

Writer Declares It Merely a Fake Ceremony.

Adoption of white men into Indian tribes has developed into a money-making "racket," according to some Indian leaders. Regular, as well as fake, ceremonies are discussed in an article in the Christian Science Monitor by Miss Mabel Knight, upon whom the name Ta-De-Win was conferred when she was adopted by the Omaha tribe in gratitude for her lectures and writings on Indian subjects.

When Indians don war paint, dance around a white man and then give him a name, Miss Knight writes, it may flatter the latter, and the former will be richer perhaps by $5, but these Indians will not consider such a one an adopted member of the tribe, for this bought and paid for ceremony is only a mock adoption.

"This fake adoption is getting to be a racket," said Charlie Wilson, prominent Nez Perce Indian, during a recent celebration of the tribe. "The adoption of white people into the tribe and then giving them the Indian equivalent of 'Chief Fine White Whiskers' and 'Princess Brook With the Silver Voice' as names should be stopped."

"Indians with no tribal standing," continued Wilson, "have been inviting whites with no tribal connections to attend our ceremonies and to become members after an exchange of 'gifts,' the gifts of the Indians being native trinkets of little worth, while the gifts of the whites are large amounts of the 'good old cash.'"

No white man ever becomes a bona-fide member of a tribe by asking for that favor. First he must prove his worth by really helping the Indians out of some difficulty, and those who like the Indians well enough to do that would not think of imposing upon them by asking for the greatest of all honors, that of being adopted into a tribe. Probably no tribe numbers more than a half dozen really adopted white members.

When a white man is judged worthy of adoption the honor comes upon him quite unaware usually and the ceremony is dignified with the president or chief of the tribe pronouncing in his native tongue the words which give this new member a name, not only a tribal name, but one which also makes him a member of some clan of that tribe, with all the honors pertaining to it.

When the Indians finally decide to honor a man or woman by making him or her a member of their tribe, the Indians give, not take, and impress this fact upon the new members, so that the latter is prohibited at that time from showing his appreciation by making presents to the Indians. Quite the reverse the Indians like to show their gratitude by giving the new members such valuable gifts as blankets, parfleches, cases, and ancient beaded buckskin pieces.

Instances of legal adoption are comparatively rare. Mrs. Harriet Maxwell Converse of New York was made a member of the Seneca tribe and later given a chieftainship in the Six Nations. But that happened only after aiding them by preventing unfair legislation both in Albany and Washington. More than that her home in New York was open to any Indian who found himself robbed or swindled in the city, and frequently an Indian would leave her home the richer by a new suit of clothes. In small things and big ones Mrs. Converse proved a real friend to the Indians, and the tribe delighted to honor her in every possible way.

A white man cannot buy a membership into any tribe. Rather he must earn it.

Much in Little

He pondered over the menu for quite a long time. At last he looked up.

"I see you have six of my favorite dishes on the menu today, waiter," he said. "Which do you specially recommend?"

The waiter, whose position in the restaurant expired at the end of the week, sniffed.

"Well, sir," he said in a hoarse whisper, "if I were you I'd take the stew and have the whole lot!"—El Paso World News.
